ARC is an internationally recognized independent record label based upon a new artist collective model of artist empowerment and ownership of their work.

The published ARC label catalog of recordings contains well over 100 releases with all titles available at all of the major retailers worldwide.

Over 400 artists appear on ARC recordings, including emerging talent and established noted names in music.

"Collectively, they continue to define a 21st Century model for a jazz record label. Collectively and individually, they are looking forward and breaking the seams of the traditional jazz box."

Christopher Burnett: The Standards, Vol. 1

Modern jazz can certainly take a variety of different forms, but standards still remain the foundation for many players. With The Standards Vol. 1, Christopher Burnett brings modern and traditional elements together in an excellent meeting. His approach is to bring a traditional approach to each song, whether it's a well-loved favorite or an original composition.

Burnett is a Kansas City native with an impressive professional background. After serving 22 years in the Army, where he was able to advance both his musical and administrative skills, he cofounded the Artists Recording Collective (ARC) label. He has also had an active role in the operation and management of Kansas City's American Jazz Museum, along with establishing the nonprofit Burnett Music Foundation as well as the publication, Jazz Artistry Now.

For The Standards Vol. 1, Burnett has assembled a diverse group of musicians. The album features his core ensemble, The Christopher Burnett Quintet, with Burnett on alto saxophone, pianist Roger Wilder, Bill McKerny on bass, Clarence Smith on drums, and guitarist Charles Gatschet. Also include are Stanton Kessler on flugelhorn, Terri Anderson Burnett and Freda Proctor on flute, Samantha Batchelor clarinet and Aryana Nemati on baritone saxophone. Burnett describes his collection of musicians, "I purposely wanted to have both male and female musicians, as well as representatives from all adult generations, lending their voices to the music and arrangements."

The ensemble works together well, and the overall sound has something of a contemporary-retro quality to it. In other words, the music sounds fresh and modern with hints of classic recordings from the 1950s and 1960s mixed in. While Burnett's presence is unmistakable, the recording also has a sound reminiscent of classic recordings by producers and arrangers such as Gil Evans or Creed Taylor.

Each of the selections included has a special significance for Burnett. The opening track, Herbie Hancock's "Delphin Dance," for example, was a song he first heard during his high school years. The liner notes discuss how the song's complexity, beauty, and freedom reflects certain aspects of the African-American experience during the 1960s. "On one hand society was saying black people were inferior, but at the same time, Herbie was afforded this wide artistic freedom that was so optimistic."

Other selections such as the classic standards "Corcovado" and "All The Things You Are" also have personal connections for Burnett. Along with these are less common selections such as "Boplicity" from Miles Davis' Birth of the Cool and Chick Corea's "Windows." All of these songs serve as something of a musical scrapbook bringing his musical history together with fresh, new arrangements.

Burnett also recognizes musicians who influenced his own style. He recognizes alto players such as Cannonball Adderley, Sonny Stitt, Lee Konitz, and Charlie Parker as having an impact on his playing. He describes how he spent hours transcribing solos by each of these players while he was studying at the Armed Forces School of Music.

The album closes with the Burnett original, "Freedom Flight," which is a tribute to his son, Seth, who is a pilot in the US Air Force. This rhythm and uplifting melody give this selection a quality much like traditional jazz standards. As Burnett explains, "I enjoy when something I compose connects with people. Like the standards do."

With The Standards Vol. 1, Burnett shows how songs continue to evolve and allow players to express their own unique style. The level of musicianship is exceptional here, and Burnett definitely gives each song a refreshing vitality.

Artists Recording Collective (ARC) was co-founded on December 7, 2007 by alto saxophonist, CHRISTOPHER BURNETT; tenor saxophonist, ERICA LINDSAY; and, pianist, SUMI TONOOKA as a professional response to an inherent void within the music industry then. The ongoing purpose and artists collective business approach remains to serve as an integral part of the modern music industry infrastructure.

ARC is a viable and safe platform for recording artists to reach the world with their recorded catalogs. The label was subsequently incorporated as a Limited Liability Company (LLC) entity in 2009 which was maintained up until 2020 when ARC became a featured nonprofit program of Burnett Music Foundation which in 2023 matriculated into the public charity, Kansas City Area Youth Jazz Inc.

Specifically speaking to its history, the co-founders have been successful in their endeavor to create and maintain a modern recording label brand that continually evolves to serve as a viable 21st Century Platform to promote and release the projects and recordings produced by professional artists and composers.

MISSION AND PURPOSE

+Artists Recording Collective – ARC Recording Label was founded in 2007 by professional recording artists who wanted a viable industry platform and a “safe” place to document their work. The label began with one release featuring 3 artists.

+ARC is a nonprofit program that takes no money from its artists and serves as a permanent front catalog archive.

+ARC is a GS1 company brand and GLN legal entity that’s established a positive reputation for quality music globally.

+ARC releases are reviewed in all of the top publications.

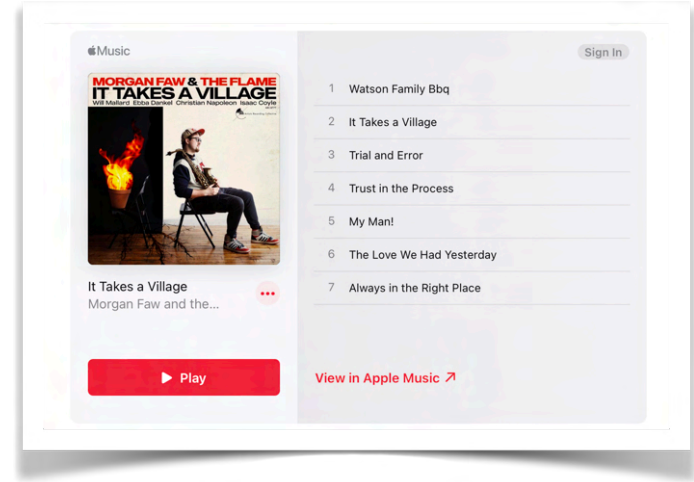

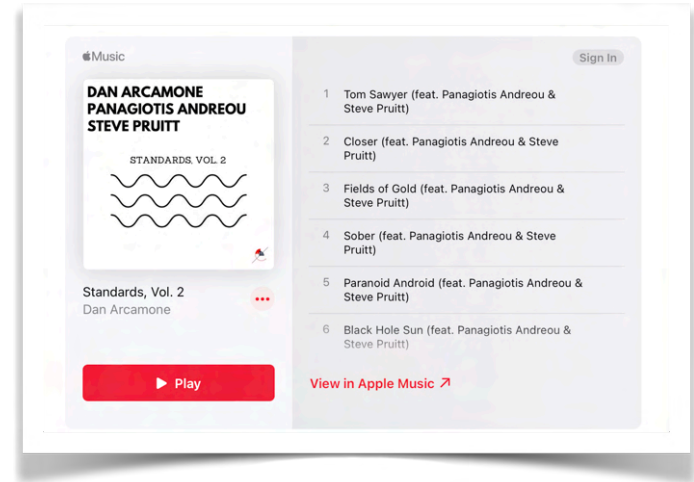

+ARC is celebrating “15 Years of Excellence.”

+Our model is constructed to provide a platform for recording artists, the ARC GS1 CATALOG, and promote the “collective” of individual artist brands for the long-term historical benefit of all.

+Today ARC’s catalog is over 100 releases featuring over 400 artists.

+ARC is progressive and unique. There’s no other modern era or 21st-century record label doing what we do today. That’s cool.

+ARC is Jazz music’s first true “brand collective.”
